Ethical Leadership:
Walking with the Excluded

Today's world faces a profound social and environmental polycrisis, with near-record fear and uncertainty amplified by technologies like AI and social media that fuel rising disinformation, authoritarianism, and threats to democracy, scientific integrity, independent media, education, and progress. Drawing on his own experiences as well as Jesuit and global ethical traditions, Pitts' talk will call for a reinvigorated kind of leadership that embraces servant, shared, values-based, and transformational models of leadership to rediscover both hope and practical paths toward systemic personal and collective action solutions that more effectively confront today's interconnected crises.
