

Our America: Who Are We?

A Digest of Impressions, Reflections and Opinions

Edited by Sondra Myers

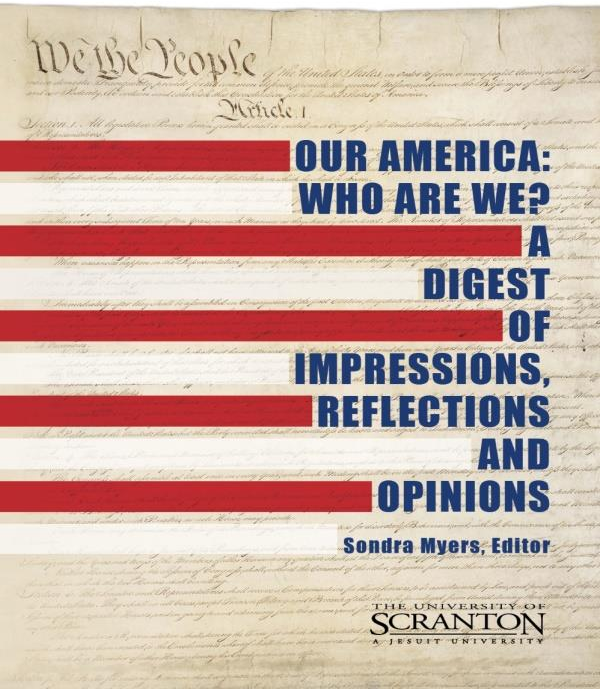

My newest handbook is one that has been on my mind for twenty years but only eight months ago the moment seemed right to address the question. There is no easy answer to it--perhaps there is no answer to it at all. That said I hope that this investigation into the impressions, reflections and opinions of a wide array of scholars, journalists and thoughtful citizens will give us a better sense of who we are and who we aspire to be. At our best a work in progress? Let's think about it. SM

Howard Gardner, Hobbs Research Professor of Cognition and Education, Harvard Graduate School of Education

"An impressive collection of writings ably introduced and curated by Sondra Myers. Even — perhaps especially — in an era of rapid digital communication and miscommunication, we need to visit and, indeed, revisit such seminal texts."

William M. Sullivan, Senior Scholar, New American Colleges and Universities

"In this time of disinformation and intense partisan animosity, many are asking how they can believe in democracy, even what America means now. Look no further. Introduced with lucid commentaries, this book invites its readers into a continuing conversation among a variety of figures, past and present, seeking to make sense of the wide dimensions, as well as the fuller potential, of the American project. Perfect for focusing serious discussion as well as personal exploration of what, despite serious failures and problems, makes America a land of promise."
